he closure of RAF Coltishall in April 2006 marked the end of the line for a historic Battle of Britain fighter station. Opened in 1940, Coltishall was the last RAF station to operate three squadrons of aircraft from flight lines in front of squadron hangars, and was the last operational front-line former Battle of Britain station. During the 1960s it was a famous Lightning fighter base until, in 1974, it became the home of the RAF Jaguar Force.

Michael Rondot's new painting portrays a busy day on the line at Coltishall as groundcrews and pilots prepare their aircraft to fly. Their attention is diverted by the approach of a pair of Jaguars carrying out a mock airfield attack, flying low and fast over the 41(F) Squadron engineering buildings. The attention to detail and accuracy are typical of the artist's fluid painting style, and absolutely capture the atmosphere of a busy front-line fighter station.

Published in a very restricted limited edition, "COLTISHALL" recalls, for collectors of military aviation art, the golden years of the Royal Air Force.

GICLÉE CANVAS MASTERWORKS

These beautiful artist-signed prints on canvas replicate, with striking effect, the look and feel of the original painting. Only a very few are issued with each edition, and because they are so rare, they are often fully subscribed soon after release. (Image size: 30x20 inches).

ARTIST'S PROOFS

Artist's proofs (APs) are traditionally reserved for use by the artist and publisher and are given a greater value by collectors because they often have added signatures and may be difficult to obtain. The 50 APs in this edition have ten additional signatures.

REMARQUE PRINTS

Especially prized for their rarity and personal touch, remarque prints have an original pencil drawing of a Jaguar added to the print border similar to the example at the bottom of this page.
